weddings," enthuses Georgina, whose full planning service starts at about £2,000. "I believe that every wedding should reflect the couple perfectly and their guests should scream 'that is so them!'"

And to help them decide, Georgina – along with Shannon, who she met at a wedding they were both working at last year – has started organising photo shoots involving many different Oxford area wedding suppliers to create fantasy wedding shoots based on fairytales.

Brides-to-be (and in her experience it is the women who still make all the major wedding plan decisions) can then pick and choose aspects they like to incorporate into their own events.

The first shoot's theme was Enchanted. It had a "Tim Burton/Mad Hatter's tea party" feel to it and half a dozen or so suppliers took part. Since then it has grown to about a dozen suppliers taking part.

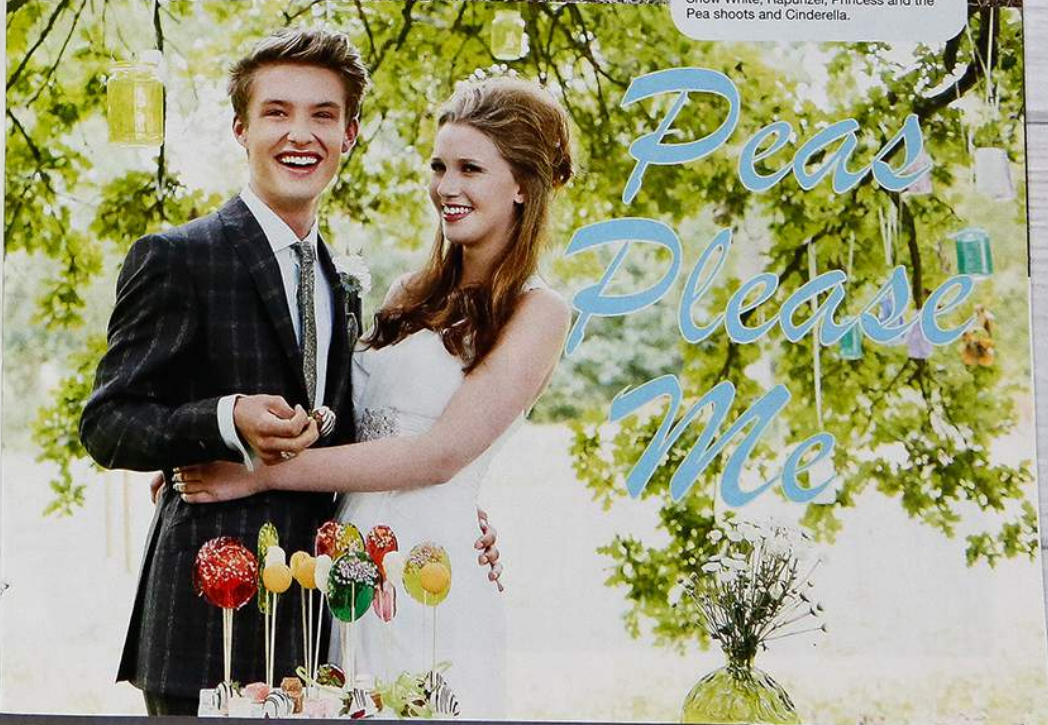

"It's all cross marketing and it's a way for everyone to get as much publicity as possible," said Georgina.

She said it was common for a few suppliers – maybe a bridal store, a venue and a hair and beauty company – to get together for a shoot but not on the scale of what she and Shannon are doing. Wedding cakes, table settings, stationery, flowers and plenty more are shown off to their best advantage.

The result is a continuing series of beautiful and inspiring wedding scenes.

"They are fairytale with a modern twist. They show you can still be quite traditional but with a few details that inject your personality," said Georgina.

Since Enchanted, the pair have organised Snow White, Rapunzel, Princess and the Pea Shoots and Cinderella.
